

I am deeply concerned about the decision of Sinclair Broadcasting to air a distinctly partisan "documentary" designed to influence the presidential election and to force local stations to air this under the guise of news. This is a shameful and shocking example of how media consolidation serves corporate interests and political agendas. I thought that since public airwaves are free, they were supposed to serve us, the people. But I see I am wrong. My local affiliate, WLOS is certainly not serving my community by taking its marching and programming orders from Sinclair Broadcasting. I don't think that the Sinclair owned stations in North Carolina deserve to have their TV broadcasters licenses renewed if they are merely political pawns of a media giant and not serving the community.

I urge you to look deeply into this matter.

Rebecca Williams